HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

In 2025, the Managed Income Fund achieved a positive return for the year by successfully navigating a year of evolving economic growth and shifting monetary policy. The Fund maintained a consistent Risk-On posture, particularly during the first half of the year when resilient economic data supported higher-yielding credit. As the market faced mid-year volatility driven by trade and labor uncertainties, our selective approach allowed us to benefit from the broad recovery in fixed income that followed easing inflation pressures.

The final months of the year were defined by a clear shift toward lower interest rates, with the Federal Reserve delivering two 25-basis-point cuts to end the year at a 3.50%-3.75% target range. To capitalize on this environment, Managed Income remained fully Risk-On for eight consecutive months through year-end. By focusing on US high yield and multisector fixed income, the Fund emphasized income-generating assets with lower sensitivity to interest rate changes, which outperformed long-duration Treasuries and drove our performance for the year.
